William Worthington Fowler, the author of this work, is a grandson of Noah Webster, and the author of several other volumes. He has been a member of the Connecticut Senate and House of Representatives, and held numerous other prominent positions. He is now Chairman of the Commission appointed by the Governor of Connecticut to examine and report as to the expediency of adopting an amended orthography of the Public Documents. This Commission embraces some of the most eminent scholars in the country. In addition to his public and literary labors, Mr. Fowler has had long and varied experiences in financial matters. Ten years since he embodied these experiences in a volume which was so well received that forty thousand copies were sold in a short period, though the price of the work was fixed at three dollars. John G. Whittier wrote to the author, Thy book is full of interest. Its descriptions of the tremendous games of speculation, the rise and fall of fortune, the reckless regard and desperate adventure which shocked and disturbed the world are exceedingly graphic and spirited. Charles Sumner, Salmon P.Chase, George S. Boutwell, Benson J. Lossing, John G. Saxe, and very many other individuals of prominence wrote in similarly complimentary terms to the author regarding his entertaining work. Nearly one hundred and fifty newspapers, including all the leading journals of New...
