Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This book talks about money, wealth and the national debt that created it. It predicts financial Armageddon by 2020 if nothing is done, and nothing will be done because a capital levy provokes violent prejudice by coming into conflict with the deep instincts by which the love of money protects itself. (John Maynard Keynes) The public sees money and banking as highly complex sophistry whereas in fact the creation of money is so simple that the mind is repelled, using John Kenneth Galbraith s words. Professor Galbraith also said: The final thing, in economics, is to have one great truth always in mind. That is, that there are no propositions in economics that can t be stated in clear, plain language. There just aren t. Do not be alarmed by simplification, complexity is often a device for claiming sophistication, or for evading simple truths. The book analyses the wealth structure of America and finds the top 10 of the population owning 70 of the nation s wealth. This top 10 -- the five million millionaires and billionaires -- would be the prime segment of the US population to receive a capital levy to fund a loss equalization fund from the cancellation of a national debt that created their fortunes, without any fear of a recession. National debt redemption alternatives are discussed, including an in depth review of Germany s successful monetary reform of 1948 based on the American Colm-Dodge-Goldsmith plan imposed by the Allied military governments. The book reflects on the involvement of the Federal Reserve, the Bank of England, the European Central Bank and other central banks concerning their countries burgeoning public debts, in particular that of...
