The First Wesleyan General Conference--Elected President --The Secret-society Question--On the Verge of an Explosion--Elected Editor--Homeward Bound--A Terrible Storm. WHEN the General Conference assembled, Orange Scott was elected president on the first ballot, but declined. On a second ballot I was elected. I expected a stormy time, yet I accepted and took the chair, and the Conference proceeded to business. While appointing the standing committees a motion was made to appoint a committee on secret societies. This waked up the disturbing element which came so near breaking us up in the Utica convention. I dreaded it as much as I would a tornado, and I soon found I had one on hand. It was not yet known where I stood, which, I believe, was fortunate, otherwise I do not believe I could have held the Conference in the struggle. The committee was ordered . amid much excitement, and the vote indicated that the anti-secret society men had a small majority. The committee in due time reported a rule excluding the members of all secret societies from the Church. It was urged by Smith, Walker, and others, and opposed by Scott, Horton, and others. Scott and Horton were cool debaters, but Smith was all fire and flame on this subject. Had the question been on the admission of the devil into the Church he could not have been more furious. He could not wait to reply to Scott s arguments; he denounced them...
