Excerpt: . . . After quality-control criteria are met Three strategies are used to minimize the satisfactorily, the instrument operator transfers the final flocculation of DOC from peat soil water samples. DOC concentrations to the laboratory information First, samples that flocculate can be diluted with management system (LIMS) into the appropriate organic-free water using volumetric pipettes and location. Because all samples are logged into the LIMS reanalyzed. and assigned a unique identification number, DOC data Second, samples that flocculate are acidified are archived easily. The LIMS entries are checked by with the minimum amount of acid necessary to assure the instrument operator and by the chief or designate of removal of dissolved inorganic carbon (DIC). A test the research project for which the samples were was done to determine the pH value required to assure analyzed, and then flagged as verified . The entire removal of DIC. The sample pH value required to LIMS database is mirrored daily to a second hard-drive assure removal of DIC was determined using a sample and backed up weekly on the USGS California (that was known to flocculate) containing 3. 6 mg L Districts external, secure data back-up system. DOC and 30 mg L DIC added as sodium bicarbonate Procedures are being developed to export DOC (NaHCO) . The sample was acidified to pH values 3 concentrations from the LIMS database to the USGS ranging from 8. 3 to 1. 9. The DOC concentration National Water Information System (NWIS) database. decreased as pH decreased from 8. 3 to about 2. 7 and then remained roughly constant as pH...
