Captain Grinter was standing pistol in hand just abaft the main companion, surrounded by the officers, and the larger portion of the crew; most of whom had firearms, and all some weapon or other. I reached the deck just as the Captain was speaking in a very loud voice, and the first words I heard fully explained to me what was the matter. Come on you mutinous dogs, shouted Captain Grinter, if you dare. The first man who moves, I ll shoot. As sure as I m captain of this ship. We aint mutinous dogs, answered a voice, but you re not going to run our necks into the noose, if we have anything to say to it. Captain Grinter turned to his officers, and after a minute, said, If any man has anything to say let him step out and say it. No harm shall come to him, but first let me have a few words with you. I ve not told you before men, but we are short of water, and we haven t more than enough to carry us to the nearest port, and that s Port Royal. This announcement was evidently received by the mutineers with alarm, for as not a word was uttered, the Captain continued, Up to the present time we ve taken many a bale, and doubloon from the Dons, and Mossoos,...
