The disastrous conflagrations which so constantly lay waste large sections of our cities and towns are almost unknown on the continent of Europe. Illustrations might be multiplied, but Glasgow and Birmingham deserve more than a passing mention, for they are conspicuous examples of the successful application to municipal affairs of that sound business sense upon which we so unreasonably plume ourselves. GLASGOWS MODEL GOVERNMENT. In Glasgow we have a city which in 1888 had about 560, 000 people in an area of some 6, 100 acres, so that it may well be compared with several of our American cities. The population is extremely dense and dwells largely in tenement houses, so that the conditions are extremely unfavorable to cleanliness and health, and there is nothing in the character of the population which makes it especially easy to govern. It is possible in this paper to give only the briefest summary of the work which the city government does, and does well. The public health is secured by a large force of trained inspectors, some of whom seek for cases of infectious disease; others search for nuisances such as defective drains and unwholesome accumulations; others who are women go from house to house among poor families and make suggestions as to housekeeping methods, and others still are night inspectors who visit lodging houses to see that the laws against overcrowding are respected. Their labors to prevent disease are supplemented by admirable hospitals, of which the latest...
